

"You don't need human relationships to be happy. God has placed it all around us." – Into the Wild

With this conception, you are in life but, for me, you don't live! Even it's possible for a few people to be happy with God and God setting only, according to me, interactionism is present at all steps of our existence from conception to the end. What is around us (God or not) is useful to attempt to reach the happiness. I don't want a Robinson Crusoe life! What made God (or not) is a human invention (I don't believe in God). The things around us are the fruits of evolution and I think NATURE (other name of God?) is present since the beginning of our universe. In conclusion, you cannot be, really, happy without external intelligence confrontation.
